Chapter 169: The Lesser Divine: Duo Dragons

Sung Jin-Woo, standing as the pinnacle of power within the Divine Triad, knew that his bloodline would eventually carry the weight of his legacy forward. His grandchildren, Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin, were gifted with a fraction of his unmatched power — a mere 0.001%, but even that small percentage held profound significance. While the number might seem trivial when compared to his full strength, considering that his clones already demonstrated extraordinary might with just 0.05% of his power, this gift was far from insignificant. What truly made this gift extraordinary was that it was a piece of the Divine Creation Power, a force reserved only for Gods.

1. The Gift of Power

As the God of Shadows and Life, God of Creation and Abundance, Sung Jin-Woo had the ability to create and shape reality itself. In granting his grandchildren this fraction of his divine essence, he was not merely bestowing upon them power in the traditional sense. This creation power allowed them to mold the fabric of existence, a gift that would mark them as beings of divine potential.

Sung Jin-Woo's essence infused Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin with the ability to create, shape, and manipulate worlds, alongside granting them the means to form realms within their bodies. His gift transcended the physical realm and seeped into the very core of their beings, amplifying their divine nature. They would now carry a fraction of his unparalleled power, with the ability to create, a blessing that would allow them to expand beyond what any normal being could ever hope to achieve.

2. The Lesser Divine: Duo Dragons

The act of creation would be the key to their future, and their divine status was cemented the moment they received this gift. Though they were not yet at the full strength of the Divine Triad, they had been imbued with the mark of divine beings. Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin would henceforth be known as The Lesser Divine: Duo Dragons, a title befitting their draconic lineage and the divine power that now ran through their veins.

The term Lesser Divine was not a reflection of their worth or power but rather a distinction between them and their grandfather and father, the true gods of their realms. Yet even as the Lesser Divine, their strength was unparalleled compared to others, and their potential for growth was limitless. They were beings in their own right, worthy of reverence and awe.

3. The Creation of Inner Worlds and Clones

With the 0.001% of Sung Jin-Woo’s power, Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin unlocked a new realm of possibilities. Their bodies became the vessel for the creation of not just one, but seven-layered inner worlds. Each of these layers was a miniature universe, a pocket dimension containing its own environments, beings, and laws. This immense power allowed them to expand beyond the limits of the physical body and transcend the material realm.

These inner worlds were not just spaces for the storage of power, but rather realms that could be used to refine their abilities, create beings of incredible strength, and manipulate the forces within them to suit their needs. As they grew and evolved, these worlds would become part of them, each layer representing a different aspect of their being.

In addition to these inner worlds, they each created three clones, each of which would serve a specific purpose.

4. The Three Clones

First Clones:
Their first clones were sent into the Abyss, following the path of their grandfather, Sung Jin-Woo, and father, Sung Su-Ho. The Abyss was a realm where power and strength were tested, and these clones would serve as their agents in this chaotic world. The first clones would fight battles, gather knowledge, and pave the way for their future dominance. They would be instrumental in strengthening their connection to the Divine Triad's forces and expanding their reach.

Second Clones:
The second clones were stationed within the Palace of The Divine Legacy. The Palace was the heart of the Divine Triad’s rule, a sacred place where the power of the gods resided. Here, the second clones would maintain their connection to the Divine Triad, learning from their ancestors, observing the ruling dynamics, and ensuring the continued strength of their bloodline. The Palace would serve as a strategic center for their long-term goals.

Third Clones:
The third clones were deployed to Earth, where they would pose as S-Rank hunters. Disguised as ordinary mortals, these clones would gather intelligence, observe the human world, and act as subtle agents of the divine. Their presence on Earth would allow them to influence events, guide the course of history, and ensure that their bloodline remained intact among the human realm. These clones would build relationships with key figures and guide humanity’s growth, preparing them for the day when the divine powers would reveal themselves fully.

5. The Path Ahead

With the power of creation now at their disposal and the creation of their inner worlds, the future for Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin was bright. As The Lesser Divine: Duo Dragons, they were poised to become legends in their own right. The gifts bestowed upon them by Sung Jin-Woo ensured that they would rise to heights unimaginable, shaping the course of destiny across realms.

Their journey had only just begun, and with each clone, each inner world, and each act of creation, they would grow in power, expanding their influence and preparing for the inevitable moment when they would inherit the true divine mantle of their bloodline. The Divine Triad was complete, and the Lesser Divine were on the path to becoming the next great force in the multiverse.
